John Lehane made a significant contribution to the study and practice of law in Australia. A University of Sydney Medallist, he began his legal career as an articled clerk at Allen Allen & Hemsley in 1966. He became the firm's leading banking law partner, managing partner and, ultimately, chairman.

In 1995, he was appointed to the Federal Court of Australia, where he served with distinction until 2001. John Lehane lectured in law at the University of Sydney for many years, published numerous papers and co-authored Australia's leading text on equity. One of his eminent contemporaries, Roddy Meagher, said of him: 'He was one of the greatest lawyers and one of the nicest men any of us will ever meet.'
